My darlingest Mummy.

It wouldn't seem like Sunday, if I didn't tuck in a word for you, along with the others.

Thank you for the stamps; and also for telling me to write on a card to Miss Cook and Mrs. My, what would happen to me, if you didn't tell me all the nice little things to do! But I didn't understand which Mrs.
Cook it was - the old man, or the one who rocks so hard. It's too bad whoever it is.

I'll be so glad to go home.
What a relief it will be not to have any old Irish maids around! I'm glad you taught me long ago to keep my temper, or I'm afraid that by this time I wouldn't have any at all, I'd have lost it so many times. I try to grin and bear them but gee, it's hard sometimes.

Margaret has asked me to sit aside one afternoon ^{during vacation,} as she is going to have all of the girls up at her house. I think that will be fun and I suppose we won't have her around much longer. She is going to be a bridesmaid at Avis's wedding.

I must get ready for dinner now, so goodbye, Thine dear, Jennie.
